April 11 PDAA Lunch to Feature Experts on Historic Paris Climate Change Accord

n celebration of Earth Day 2016, PDAA is hosting a discussion with two experts on the agreement reached by nearly 200 nations at the historic December 2015 Paris summit that will commit nearly every nation to lowering plant-warming greenhouse gases. International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, served as part of the negotiating team in the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change. He is a career foreign service officer who most recently served in Costa Rica as the Regional Environmental Officer for Central America and the Caribbean.

The lunch, to take place at the DA-COR-Bacon House on April I I, will begin at noon with a panel commencing at I p.m.

The Paris Accord, as good as it is, only cuts the emission of greenhouse gases by half as much as is needed to forestall the 2 degrees Celsius increase in atmospheric temperatures that scientists warn could have a devastating effect – rising sea levels, droughts, water shortages, among others -- on our planet. Many experts believe that the Paris Accord should be viewed as just a framework for additional measures that will be required to set the earth on a more sustainable path.

We are very fortunate to have two speakers to address where we are headed globally in addressing climate change, what are the next steps after Paris, and what needs to be done in terms of outreach to help convince publics of the importance of moving rapidly to mitigate the effects of decades of policies that failed to integrate sound environmental science.

Our first speaker, Tim Lattimer, acting director of the State Department's Office of Global Change in the Bureau of Oceans and

To give us an independent view, we are pleased to have Sarah Ladislaw, director and senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies' Energy and National Security Program. An author and expert on the geopolitics of energy, energy security and climate change, Ladislaw is frequently called on to advise policymakers, testify before Congress, speak as an expert commentator before the press, and advise companies.

This PDAA lunch program will be held from 12 noon to 2 p.m., on Monday, April 11 at DACOR-Bacon House, 1801 F Street NW, Washington, D.C. Reservations are $35 for members and $42 for non-members. The deadline for reservations is Tuesday, April 5. You can reserve with a credit card at www.publicdiplomacy.org, or complete and mail the form on page 7 with your check.

The Black King: A Story of Relationships

Cynthia Farrell Johnson

ublic Diplomacy is all about relationships and collaborative activities. When I left the Foreign Service in 2005, I knew that PD skills picked up over the years would come in handy in my new art adventures. As long as I can remember, I have loved painting and crafts. While in the Foreign Service, I exhibited my art in the country of my assignment, in neighboring countries, and in the United States.

There was a Time

There was a Time (Cynthia Farrell Johnson)

When I returned permanently to the States in 1998, I began preparing for retirement, building a network of artist contacts, joining arts organizations, and learning as much as I could about the gallery and museum scene in the Washington metro area. Eventually, I began making cards and prints to sell at craft fairs and art markets along with original works. I also got help putting up a website, and learned to use new marketing technologies.

As I got started, my older sister was one of my biggest boosters. She purchased cards and calendars, sending them to friends as holiday or birthday gifts. One day, out of the blue, I received an email from Clyde Moneyhun, an English professor at Boise State University in Idaho, asking me if I would illustrate a children's book. Coincidentally, I had just met with an art curator who thought I should illustrate picture books and I was mulling over how best to go about doing that when the message from Idaho appeared in my inbox!

I learned that Mr. Moneyhun's mother-in-law had received one of my calendars from my sister. It seems he had translated the story of The Black King from Catalan to English, and the author, Ponc Pons, wanted a new illustrator for the U.S. edition. Moneyhun and Mr. Pons looked at my web site, and decided to get in touch. The rest, as they say, is history. The Black King was published in November 2015 in time to go on sale at holiday markets.

Besides painting, exhibiting, and participating in art and crafts markets, I serve on the board of Silver Spring Town Center Inc. (SSTCi). It is like being the Cultural Affairs Officer for downtown Silver Spring. The mission of Silver Spring Town Center, Inc. is to provide a vibrant, inclusive and engaging community gathering place that enriches the lives of residents of the Greater Silver Spring area. SSTCi presents over 100 free arts and entertainment programs and events throughout the year in downtown Silver Spring, including its ever-popular blues festival.

A favorite activity is co-hosting the SSTCi Art Salon, which meets in the Kramer Gallery of the Civic Building. The next one is on April 20 at 6:30 p.m. Anyone interested in the arts and humanities is welcome to join. By volunteering on this board, I have learned a lot about the community, the local art scene, and politics in Montgomery County.

When I returned to the U.S in 1998, I explored the Washington area the same way I got to know my overseas posts. My focus was on the creative and business communities. Many of the relationships I began have blossomed into wonderful friendships. The transition from active duty FSO to full-time artist was virtually seamless, thanks to the PD skill of building purposeful relationships acquired over my years in the U.S. Information Agency. # President's Notes

Dear PDAA Members and Friends,

t was a great pleasure to see so many of you at our most recent PDAA luncheon program. Many of you have told me how much you enjoyed and learned from Michael McCurry's insights into the role of foreign policy in Presidential campaigns. I agree it was an outstanding and relevant program, and certainly one of our best attended.

Our April 11 program on climate change and next steps following the historic Paris Accords is no less timely. As the article on page 1 of the newsletter notes, both our State Department and CSIS speakers are experts on this topic. I look forward to seeing you for this important program.

Looking ahead, we have a wonderful end-of-year brunch planned for May 15 at the beautiful and historic Fort Myer Officers' Club in Arlington. Please see the announcement on page 4 of this edition of the newsletter for details. The brunch will be highlighted, as always, by the presentation of our awards for excellence in public diplomacy.

This event is always a great opportunity to get together with friends and former colleagues, enjoy good food, celebrate the approach of summer, and honor the outstanding achievements in public diplomacy of our awardees. I look forward to welcoming you to this event. If you wish to contribute to our PDAA Award fund, there is still time to do so.

Unfortunately, we have had to postpone our planned reception at the French Ambassador's residence, scheduled for April 25, because the Ambassador will not be available that evening. We are still working to try to arrange another event with the French Embassy and hope to be able to provide more information soon.

It is with sadness that we remember the passing of two former colleagues who contributed so much to the practice of public diplomacy. The first is Ambassador John Reinhardt, who during the Carter Administration was Director of USIA, renamed "USICA" (the U.S. International Communication Agency) during that time, in recognition of the importance of two-way communication in successful public diplomacy. The second is McKinney Russell, former Counselor of USIA and Minister Counselor for Public Affairs in the former Soviet Union and in China during the Tiananmen Square crisis, among other senior positions. The In Memoriam section of this newsletter includes remembrances of both for them. I want to thank all of you who have renewed your membership and welcome our new members. It is not too early to look ahead to our next program year; please send us your ideas for programs and other ways in which we can make PDAA an even stronger and more relevant organization!

Best wishes,

Greta Morris President, PDAA
